SIMPLE STEPS TO HELP SAVE LIVES: LEARN PRACTICAL TOOLS AND TIPS IN PRIMARY CARE TO HELP PREVENT SUICIDE

Suicide is a growing public health crisis, and medical students and other clinicians in training who will be entering the primary care space are likely to encounter patients at risk for suicide. Nearly half of suicide victims visit a primary care provider in the month before their passing, making primary care visits crucial opportunities to intervene. However, many clinicians receive minimal training in suicide prevention during their education.

The Association of Clinicians for the Underserved has developed a new “Quick Tips” guide to help prepare clinicians in training, residents, and other newly practicing clinicians with simple, practical strategies and micro-interventions that can be seamlessly incorporated into any primary care visit. Join nationally known suicide prevention expert Dr. Virna Little in exploring these quick, evidence-based strategies to help prepare students—or refresh practicing clinicians—in identifying, assessing, and intervening with patients at risk of suicide.
